

Are you ready to die for your guns?

"Attempts at confiscation will receive the death penalty," said JB (Bruce) Campbell, founder of the modern militia movement, during a pro-gun rally at the Driggs City Center Feb. 1.

"I'll tell you this, sir: your statements are frightening, and I am speechless," said Teton County Sheriff Tony Liford, during the rally.

Kitchener Head: "When they take the guns away from the people they turn the people into slaves."

Tony Goe: "I'm more afraid of the people coming after our food and after our [resources] than the government coming after our guns."

If they come for your guns without a warrant, somebody's going to have to die.

JB Campbell, who organized an anti-gun control rally at the Driggs Senior Center Friday night, told the full house that gun confiscation is an act of war against the people.

With gun owners increasingly jittery over myriad proposed gun control laws some perceive will eventually disarm them, some are gearing up to fight.

"Anyone who's hoping there's a safe, legal and peaceful way to hold on to his guns is going to be disappointed. Gun control is about who is going to run this country – us or the foreign gangsters," said Campbell, founder of the modern militia movement.

Campbell said the "rabid dogs" in the Obama administration and the "international gangsters" of the United Nations, Communist China, the Israeli lobby and the Mexican drug cartels want ordinary American citizens disarmed.

"They mean to enslave all of us and kill some of us," he said. "We're going to have to fight back sooner or later, regardless of whom it pleases or displeases. It's either fight or start waving the white flag and I doubt that anyone in here is ever going to wave the white flag. Nope, we'll fight it out and see who wins. I'm pretty sure it's going to be us."

By us, Campbell meant ordinary citizens, who account for some 300 million-400 million firearms in America. That massive number of guns is the only thing standing in the way of "a declaration of a totalitarian dictatorship by the Obama administration."

Should laws involving confiscation be enacted, Teton County, along with the rest of the nation's citizens, should be prepared to act against them, said Campbell.

"At that point, we start making changes," he said. "We, the ones who pay the bills, take over the law. Our law will become what used to be called frontier justice. Attempts at confiscation will receive the death penalty."

Campbell said a standard procedure of immediate action must be developed "in the event any county resident is attacked by gun-grabbers. This is the essence of our new neighborhood watch program: our readiness to defend our fellow residents from federal attackers."

This will also apply to any attempt at police or military roadblocks in Teton County, Campbell said.

“We now know that drones have been used against us here in the valley, so we encourage the shooting down of these dangerous weapons at the first opportunity,” he said. “Look up when you hear something overhead.”

According to Campbell, “there is no doubt” many police departments are encouraged to brutalize civilians.

“The list of American terrorism around the world is too long for this meeting,” Campbell said. “Many of us have suspected that our military men and women have been trained in Iraq and Afghanistan to brutalize civilians there, as a prelude to do the same to civilians over here.”

“I have faith in the USA,” said Teton County Sheriff Tony Liford, later in the meeting. Just because something is on the Internet doesn’t make it true, he said, and he defends everyone’s right to their own opinions. But he told Campbell and the audience that he “doesn’t have the same cynical view as other folks about this country.”

“I’ll tell you this, sir,” Liford said, “your statements are frightening, and I am speechless.”

Tony Goe, whose career included helping develop Intelligence business processes for the Defense Intelligence Agency and working with Joint Special Operations and other agencies, said he’d “rather have those people [the military] by my side than anybody else when the feces hits the fan over this gun control thing.”

Goe said the people who will cause the most threat “are the people... who don’t have. I’m more afraid of the people coming after our food and after our [resources] than the government coming after our guns.”

Goe said he believes ordinary citizens should have the right to carry weapons of personal and self-defense equal to that allowed to the military.

“Do not come for my guns,” said Kitchener Head. “When they take the guns away from the people they turn the people into slaves. If they came for my guns, and I gave them to them, I would be the biggest coward that ever lived. When I die, it will not be as a slave, and it will not be as a coward.”

Jeff Stratton told the audience gun users should promote their sports and safety and help grow the next generation of responsible gun users. He said he missed the rifle range that used to be in Victor and believes residents should band together to develop a formal rifle range to show the sport side of gun use.

“A few bad eggs ruin it for all,” he said.

Liford, who was a New York City cop earlier in his career, said he doesn’t require those seeking concealed-weapon permits in Teton County to take any kind of class or instruction prior to issuing that permit.

At the meeting, Liford read the proclamation from the National Sheriffs’ Association, which supports the rights conferred by the Second Amendment to the Constitution.

The proclamation says, in part, that “the causes of violence must be addressed on many fronts, including improving mental health treatment, media violence, drugs, gangs, breakdown of the family, strengthening the laws that prevent or reduce the access of legally-prohibited persons to firearms and vigorous enforcement of existing laws.”

Sheriffs “strongly support our citizens’ protected right to bear arms under the Second Amendment,” the proclamation says, “and the NSA does not support any laws that deprive any citizen of the right provided under the Constitutional bill of rights.”

Idaho is a right-to-carry state, said Liford, and “you can’t legislate lunacy.”

Campbell said he started the Modern Militia Movement in 1989. He is the author of “The New American Man—A Call to Arms.”

JB Campbell organizo una reunion en contra de la regulacion de las armas. Segun Campbell el gobierno es una amenaza a la libertad del pueblo y la gente debe estar preparadas defenderse del gobierno. Otras que estaban presentes en la reunion pensaban que Campbell era un extremista. “Sus declaraciones son espantosas y me quedaron sin palabras,” dijo el Sheriff Tony Liford. Tony Goe, un exmilitar, dijo que tiene más miedo de ellos que quieren robar su comida y otros recursos que del gobierno.
