Z “Financial reports do in fact tell stories and I find them interesting to analyze and solve.”

Yes, when one knows how to read one.

They have their own narrative.

“I enjoy reading travel magazines! I don't have much of a chance to do so...as a matter of fact I just threw away a Travel Magazine that I had sitting on the cocktail table of my living room that was dated June of 2005! I enjoy reading about different places, experiences, the best rated restaurants, hotels, and sites to experience, etc. I would love to travel around the world one day (who doesn't have that dream?!?), but until then, reading travel narratives/magazines is an experience of its own. I try to really involve myself into the narrative so that I am living through their travelling experience.”

How was this for a different language?

“It's fun to try and interpret what's going on in the text of a different language.”

gossip magazines. I don't necessarily buy these magazines and they aren't first on my to-buy list each week, but I will sit down and read these types of magazines if I see them sprawled on the table, floor, etc. of my friend's house. If I'm in line at the grocery store, I will let my eye browse the magazines on the stand and will usually pick one up and devour as much text as I can until it's my turn to pay-out at the register. I would like to think my life isn't too dramatic and would like for it to stay that way, but reading about drama in other people's lives is another story! I am a woman, right? What woman doesn't like to read and share gossip?

If I log onto my AOL IM service, I don't generally use it to talk with friends anymore, but instead, to view everyone's online profile. Even more, I love to view and read pictures posted on webshots or other photo-posting websites. I find it fun to read the title/descriptions/comments that people post under their pictures as well as read into their pictures sometimes. I think it's fun and I KNOW I'M NOT THE ONLY PERSON WHO DOES IT! I CAN'T BE, right?

I really dislike the whole stop and go when reading a novel, so I won't read one unless I have the whole time to devote reading from beginning to end. Of course, I may have to re-program myself because I don't think I will ever have the time to read an entire novel in one sitting, not in this frame of my life at least.
