PART THREE: READING PASSAGES

PASSAGE 1

But the degree of closeness can convey messages far subtler than a threat. Hall has suggested that it neatly expresses the nature of any encounter. One police textbook recognized this when it advised the detective, while questioning the suspect, to sit quite close to him with no obstruction between and to move even closer as the interrogation progressed.

91) It (line 1) refers to ....

- a) progression of interrogation
- b) degree of closeness
- c) police textbook
- d) encounters

92) The passage implies that ....

- a) distance can favor suspects
- b) tables are obstructions that affect distance
- c) messages hidden in distance are not delicate
- d) detectives do not know how to handle distance

PASSAGE 2

Primitive peoples have long believed that comets have been the harbingers of famine, pestilence, and death, and this may be the result of some dim racial memory of just that sort of comet-created catastrophe. Many of the legendary catastrophes contained within myth and religious writings were records of true events. They were the results of a near collision with a giant comet.

93) The passage implies that ....

- a) a comet did hit the earth
- b) comets are really close to earth
- c) comets have killed a lot of people in the past
- d) collision with a comet has little effect on mankind

94) They (line 4) refers to ....

- a) legendary catastrophes
- b) religious writings
- c) comets
- d) myths

PASSAGE 3

Seventy francs for ten pounds' worth of clothes! But it was no use arguing; I had seen someone else attempt to argue, and the clerk had instantly refused the pledge. I took the money and the pawnticket and walked out. I had now no clothes except what I stood up in — the coat badly out at the elbow — an overcoat, moderately pawnable, and one spare shirt. Afterwards, when it was too late, I learned that it was wiser to go to a pawnshop in the afternoon. The clerks are French, and, like most French people, are in a bad temper till they have eaten their lunch . . . . It appeared that on the previous night the Jew had flatly refused to pay the daily two francs. They had argued and argued, and at last the Jew had consented to hand over the money; he had done it, Boris said, in the most offensive manner, making a little speech about how kind he was, and extorting abject gratitude. And then in the morning he had stolen the money back before Boris was awake.

95) The pawnticket is ....

- a) a kind of ticket for cinema
- b) a kind of clothes worn by people in Paris
- c) the change for the money you for buying clothes
- d) a receipt given for goods left as deposit somewhere

96) A pawnshop is a shop where you can ....

- a) buy clothes
- b) sell your goods
- c) borrow some money
- d) find goods for Jewish people

97) Which statement is true?

- a) The clothes are worth only 17 pounds.
- b) The clothes are sold at a price of ten pounds
- c) The clothes are really cheaper than they appear to be
- d) The clothes can be left as a deposit for money at a pawn shop

PASSAGE 4

Outside the church quite a hundred men were waiting, dirty types who had gathered from far and wide at the news of a free tea, like kites round a dead buffalo. Presently the doors opened and a clergyman and some girls shepherded us into a gallery at the top of the church. It was an evangelical church, gaunt and wilfully ugly, with texts about blood and fire blazoned on the walls, and a hymn-book containing twelve hundred and fifty-one hymns; reading some of the hymns, I concluded that the book would do as it stood for an anthology of bad verse. There was to be a service after the tea, and the regular congregation were sitting in the well of the church below. It was a week-day, and there were only a few dozen of them, mostly stringy old women who reminded one of boiling-fowls. We ranged ourselves in the gallery pews and were given our tea; it was a one-pound jam-jar of tea each, with six slices of bread and margarine. As soon as tea was over, a dozen tramps who had stationed themselves near the door bolted to avoid the service; the rest stayed, less from gratitude than lacking the cheek to go.

98) Shepherded (line 3) means ....

- a) to help
- b) to tend
- c) to look at
- d) to accompany

99) It can be inferred from the passage that a hymn is ....

- a) a list of bad words
- b) a kind of poetry used in church
- c) a kind of book used at ancient times
- d) verses said in praise of someone or something

100) The job of the old women in the church was to ....

- a) pray to the holy God
- b) remind people of boiling-fowls
- c) read the holy scriptures written on church walls
- d) prepare tea for guests who came to church on week days
