I took a walk today My son and I. We walked passed the lake Then up the hill Into the woods.

I carried him for awhile But then he walked by himself With the dog chasing shadows Through the dappled forest floor.

The grass was taller than he was So he walked with his chin high, Very serious. The squirrel's chittering Made him look up to investigate. He smiled and looked at me.

We walked along a path for quite a way Then headed back toward the car. I held him again as we descended. Everything seemed so new, To both of us.

Eric Kay Summer 1998