In Death Cults, acclaimed author Adam Gorightly examines the dark underbelly of the 1960's counterculture, and the many sinister specters that emerged from the Summer of Love. In what is destined to become an underground classic, Gorightly links cults like The Process Church of the Final Judgment and the Manson Family to elements of the underworld and intelligence communities, brushing back the cobwebs of the occult to reveal a truly disturbing story that continues to haunt us today.

HELLS KITCHEN IN THE SCOTTISH NORTH Andrew Hennessey

Welcome to the Halloween emagazine edition of Scottish X files with Andrew Hennessey and Eddie Middleton. We've heard it often enough about how the UK is replete with top secret underground bases. Indeed the famous Rudloe Manor base in the south of England was very recently put up for sale, an emergency seat of government complete with atmospheric dinosaur frieze of an extinction level event.

We hear of other places all over the UK and both the official and unofficially reported lists are extensive. E.g. Brecon Beacons in Wales, Cornwall, Macrahanish in Scotland, the Lothians in Scotland and we also hear of the traditional underground cities of the Greys or faeries especially in Scotland in places like the Scottish borders at the Eildon hills, the Pentland hills outside Edinburgh, Perthshire, the Cairngorms in the north at Balmoral etc. The UK does underground I think like no other per square mile even if there are AREAS 511 on the global grid.

I personally had a run in with the weird pseudo military at Rosyth and Pitreavie which is near Edinburgh in central Scotland.

It took some time for my wits to connect that the place was only impersonating human activity.

I think seeing a small car up in some tree branches really helped in that department.

Pitreavie NATO command centre links to the cavernous and deep facility at Rosyth naval base by underground rail links.

Reputed to be both an arsenal and also a store for radioactive waste from decommissioned Polaris submarines that used to be stripped out at the dockyards.

Pitreavie industrial estate itself though has some extremely weird and deniable security especially at nights.

The underground base has an overground cover of electronics factories and a big supply depot with far too many varieties of van and courier vehicles to make it an ordinary commercial operation for just big stores.

One morning after the full moon the night before, the car park was chalked up with demonic ritual black mass pentacles ...

You can see Pitreavie industrial estate on flashearth.com and there is some very weird ball lightning streaking in and out of factories and you can also see a satellite image of a UFO across from the electronics factory.

I had gone there one sunny afternoon, as one does, to avail myself of the enormity of misuse of UK taxpayers monies when outside one of the buildings I noted a security guard – all in black.

He was smoking a cigarette and was ever watchful.

He was producing clouds of blue white smoke with aggressive smoking but kept aggressively smoking the same cigarette producing voluminous smoke for over ten minutes whilst I was there enjoying the xfiles theatre. This was the cigarette smoking man with a vengeance.

My uncle, rest in peace, was a heavy smoker, and I have witnessed him drag his way, as a joke, through one cigarette in under a minute.

What sort of ridiculous charades were going on. There is a Naval term called 'making smoke' – well this was a class A alien smoke machine at Pitreavie.

My recent connections with alleged Federation Commander Jackie Gillies at Gorebridge and rather a lot of footage taken by Jackie, and some photos of aliens on the ground locally at that locality seemed to turn up the fact that the aliens were farming the people of that area as well as abducting cattle of the 4 legged kind.

We discovered, as reported elsewhere, that aliens were using the old disused mine at Blinkbonny, flying in with silent hardware holograms switched to human looking military jets. They land and they go away with stuff regularly.

This satellite image from flashearth lets you see what the aliens are making off with – big red barrels that have no legal reason to be there ...

<http://drink.to/alienmine> that all sounds sinister, and the strange security and freaky close encounters that happen to locals there vary from; weird witches in rituals, mad max burning cars, chupacabra, men in suits, allterrain vehicles and sporty types, police on mountain bikes and a big tattooed Grey officer with bright blue eyes.

Commander Gillies took a holiday in the north of England at Alnwick, next to the weird NSA 'golf ball' radar and underground base. Adjacent is the eerie Chillingham castle with its vampire bat 'bicardi' crest.

The MoD, the Ministry of Disney own huge tracts of land amongst the forest and heathland which they classify as a firing range and enforce strict security on.

Not too far from there at Newcastle is RAF Boomer, yet another dig deep emporium with alleged alien deep levels and a very fast elevator.

At Alnwick though, they farm cattle and sheep on the MoD land and also grow crops to feed them with that have strange metric shapes in the distribution on the field, rather like crop circles except its squares.

From time to time the military in groups can be seen to come from the underground base and arrest and escort a steer up into a lorry.

Jackie was rather disconcerted to note all of the town centre suddenly stand still and look up at an overflying black helicopter.

That was all of the town – from age five to eighty five – which made it a very B Movie scene.

Jackie wasn't sure if they were afraid or expectant or awaiting instructions – and what made them all in the know as it were ?

He seemed to think in a paranoid sort of way that they were just going through the motions in the town wherever he showed up – rather like that weird film the Truman Show.

Maybe he was just being overly sensitive to the high strangeness around that area, though if people do act under control you might be excused for wondering what they really did with their spare time.

Whilst my connection to the Gorebridge material was ongoing I have personally had various contacts with Intel types, as indeed has 'Commander' Gillies. Luckily the Intel types were more trying to be helpful [which is scary]. I was reassured that with proper vision equipment – the sky was full of the droids I took pictures of in my back garden, and many more things besides.

No doubt from the grievous threats made to the Gillies family by an executive wanting to know what he knew about some ships on the moon, of which we have the pictures, then followed closely by the major corroborated abduction at Dalhousie castle of Mrs Gillies and another person – the Intel people seemed to be challenged by Jackies revelations.

I had heard from another security connection I knew that Scotland was overly privileged, and it being relatively tiny compared to major population and land area stuff elsewhere in the UK, to have not one but two rapid reaction forces in attendance.

One for gigantic London, One for the Gigantic Midlands and Two for little old Scotland.

Strange that, though certainly all the big UFO news from Scotland has had extreme difficulty making it into the mainstream.

I'm not complaining about NEVER being booked for ANY UK conference despite being in an International who's who in 2008.

It's just that we had 2 hours of mothership footage deploying hundreds of little podships in 2001 and no-one wanted to know.

It was Starwars type hardware on display, though a fleet of these large 2 mile lenticular transports with three big circular blue white drive units at the back were photographed by a fisherman off Puerto Rico a while back too.

I'm not surprised therefore that the cameraman Steve went AWOL.

The common link between my Intel interactions and the circus attendant on 'Commander' Gillies – who has recently been inundated by the International version of the GFED because he seems to or alleges to know where the pick up is going to be – is British Underground Military and British Undercover Military resident in the Highlands of Scotland.

Now I have long known about the NATO fuel dumps at Ullapool and Gairloch – its common knowledge, and about the food dump in the Isle of Skye, and Jackie Gillies has also noted and filmed tubular ships along Loch Ness plus a huge hologram of a Loch Ness Monster – which looks like a ghostly refugee of a T Rex – neck out of the water from the film Jurassic Park. This footage IS NOT FAKE – but it isn't a Pleistosauros or long necked browser most famously associated with the place. The monster can be seen at: <http://www.youtube.com/skywatcherscotland>

Jackie has noted that this phenomenon is taking place because alien ships are moving in and out of the water near there and are heading into the underwater base of the mountains.

Highland folklore from both the Reverend Kirk and Campbell is replete with faerie underground stories, so it was only a matter of time before it came to my attention that big Hydro Electric works were also underway and that, recently, secret railway tunnels were being completed to supply the underground scene near Fort William.

There are also the legends of the Grey man of Ben MacDhui and the Reptilian Blue men of the Minches [Kirk] and secret societies of shapeshifters called the MacCodrans of the Seal. [Campbell]

There was another connection to that area. When Mr Gillies had been buzzed by a low flying helicopter the morning after filming a low flying box ship fire off a probe at rooftop height the night before, he had subsequently filmed the illegal helicopter and its obviously ALIEN pilot.

When the complaint was made to air traffic control in Edinburgh, it was alleged to be registered to a survey company on routine filming from Inverness.

It could be therefore that UK high command, having abandoned Rudloe manor and all points south and their cities in chalk and mud, have all headed North to where the granites of Scotland are and set up their shop there as the new Lairds of Post Apocalyptic Scotland.

28 weeks after the Earth changes and with two big forces blocking the very few access routes to the Highlands – the new overlords and would be clan chiefs of the future sit replete having taken receipt of trainload after trainload of all the special stuff.

The best food that only an MoD requisition form can buy, cinemas, luxury farming and seedstock, gymnasiums, winter fashion gear, startrek hospitals, tractors, snowploughs, high cuisine frozen foods, helicopters, boats, ships, sports cars, hydroponics, knitwear and ironing boards and luxury steam irons for the ladies, plus the best lagers and beers, German, French and even perhaps, possibly; Australian, Chilean and Californian wines ..

Plus the very best of the best personnel; special forces, scientists, experts, agricultural experts, their egos being fed and stoked up like the overblown thanksgiving turkeys they are.

The High Command of the new Superstate of Atlantis, the ancient Atlantean Priest Kingdom of Thule breathes again ...

After all, in Scotland, the Outer islands or Outer Hebrides have the oldest exposed rock on planet Earth called Lewisian gneiss, so any investment in the bones of Scotland is bound to last forever.

Well that's the picture.

The problem is that although the Ministry of Disney have undoubtedly blown away billions of taxdollars creating this alleged lavish James Bond Armageddon underworld, the whole deal, military palaces and emporiums including new hydro-electric facilities exploiting mountain lakes or corries was designed by military high command.

Doubtless therefore the architects of this delusion were high on the products they so abundantly distribute to the rest of the useless eaters, because the whole deal is built around one of the most violent tectonic rifts in the Northern hemisphere called the Great Glen fault.

Now whereas the deal with the San Andreas fault and the Canary Islands and indeed Yellowstone are of a primary and immediate nature, UK high command experts will have calculated that being in the middle of a fairly stable plate the Scottish Highlands although possibly heading for the equator in any crustal and plate shift are safe. Shifts of the nature reported by Velikovsky [World's in Collision] and also Hancock [Fingerprints of the Gods] that put the previous equator from the last time this happened in the Antarctic though ought to have indicated to anyone with common sense that if any rock formation in Scotland was going to move, during cataclysmic geological revolution it would be the gigantic Great Glen Fault.

To build the probably global command centre for all their tomorrows within 50 miles each way of the Great Glen fault is both a criminal and suicidal joke.

It's very likely that they will have a choice of deep filled sea water or molten magma and massive breakage. Just because a Reptilian Despair Engineer and Architect of Sorrow said it was totally safe isn't the point really is it ... Feeding is.

Any hydro built around the Great Glen fault cannot have a realistic future either in a sound dam, or drop tubes, or indeed assured water table after massive geological ructions.

Imagine the terror, and utter desolation and anguish of two hundred thousand chosen as their dreams of being kings, overlords and queens living off the best of everything tear apart in the crushing and horrific darkness.

Someone has.

But then that's planet Earth for you, a despair farm and that melting pot of delusional dreams and aspirations in the north of Scotland has real gourmet potential for some choice Reptiles and Greys and specially selected suckers, set up for the sudden exquisite fall, who had hoped to work in Hell's kitchen of Sorrows.

Who Was the Inspiration for Dr. Frankenstein?

By Brad Steiger

Since 1931, when the lumbering Frankenstein Monster, portrayed by a then unknown actor, William Henry Pratt, soon to be better known as Boris Karloff, frightened audiences to the point of fainting in the theater and enduring countless nightmares for years afterward, Frankenstein has been a Halloween favorite.

The novel Frankenstein: A Modern Prometheus (1818) with its story of the iconoclastic scientist Dr. Victor Frankenstein and the monster that he stitched together of human parts and brought to life is one of the most famous works of fiction in the world. The eerie tale has inspired over 100 motion pictures, and the character of the lumbering monster has appeared in dozens more stage plays, television shows, and even video games.

The cinematic interpretations began with the 15-minute version filmed by Thomas Edison and J. Searle Dawley in 1910, and, in my opinion, the most notable adaptations have been Frankenstein (1931) with Boris Karloff as the monster and Colin Clive as Dr. Frankenstein and The Curse of Frankenstein (1957) with Christopher Lee as the monster and Peter Cushing as the obsessed scientist.

The Media Psychology Lab at California State in Los Angeles recently polled people across the United States from ages six to 90 in all ethnic groups to determine which movie monsters ranked as the favorites. According to the survey, the most frightening motion picture of all time for all groups was The Exorcist (1973), in which a demon possesses a young girl. That same survey asked interviewees to name the most frightening movie monsters of all time. Over seventy years after its initial theatrical release, the original Frankenstein monster as portrayed by Boris Karloff ranked Number Three

[For movie buffs, the top ten movie monsters were 1. Dracula, the 1931 version with Bela Lugosi as the blood-sucking count. 2. Freddy Krueger, A Nightmare on Elm Street (1984). 3. The Frankenstein Monster (1931). 4. Godzilla (1954). 5. King Kong (1933). 6. Chucky, Child's Play (1988). 7. Michael Myers, Halloween (1978). 8. Hannibal Lecter, The Silence of the Lambs (1991). 9. Jason, Friday the 13th (1980). 10. The Alien, Alien (1979).]

Some fans of Frankenstein are surprised to learn that the author whose work has become one of the greatest classics of horror was a teenaged girl. Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin (1797-1851) was just sixteen when she met the poet Percy Bysshe Shelley (1792-1822), a devotee of her father, the political philosopher William Godwin (1756-1836). Mary ran off to Europe with Shelley in 1816, and they spent the summer with Lord George Gordon Byron (1788-1824) and his friend and personal physician Dr. John Polidori (1795-1821) in Geneva. To pass the time during a dreary summer, Lord Byron suggested that each of them should write a ghost story. Eighteen-year-old Mary was the only one of the four who actually fulfilled the assignment, publishing her novel two years after she married Shelley in December 1816.

While the novel has been hailed as a masterpiece and a work of genius, scholars have long debated the source of Mary Shelley's inspiration. Although eerie and haunting, the story of a scientist who overreaches the bonds of convention to fashion new life from the bodies of the dead does not truly fit the challenge of writing a ghost story. What--or who--suggested the character of Dr. Victor Frankenstein, who became the prototype of the mad or obsessed scientist, defying the limitations of his peers and the morals and values of conventional society?

Many scholars maintain that The Golem of Jewish tradition was the young author's inspiration for the Frankenstein monster. However, according to Kabbalists, the Golem is created from virgin soil and pure spring water, rather than the body parts of cadavers--and it can only be fashioned by those who have purified themselves spiritually and physically, rather than by heretical scientists in foreboding castle laboratories who bring down electricity from the sky to animate their patchwork human. Once the Golem has been formed, it is given life by the Kabbalist placing a piece of paper with the Tetragrammaton (the four-letter name of God) written on it under its tongue.

The creation of a Golem is one of the advanced stages of development for serious practitioners of Kabbalah and alchemy. Instructions for fashioning a Golem according to the Talmudic tradition was set down sometime in the 10th century by Rabbi Eliezar Rokeach in The Book of Formation, and in his modern adaptation of the ancient text, Rabbi Aryeh Kaplan stresses that the initiate should never attempt to make a Golem alone, but should always be accompanied by one or two learned colleagues. Extreme care must be taken by its creators, for the Golem can wreak havoc. When such a mistake occurs, the divine name must somehow be removed from the creature's tongue and it be allowed to revert to dust.

The most famous Golem is "Yossele," the creature created by Judah Loew Ben Bezalel (1525-1609) to help protect the Jews of Prague from the libel that the blood of a Christian child was used during the Passover Seder. There are many accounts of how Yossele saved innocent Jews from reprisals directed against them by those citizens who had been incited by the horrible accusations of human sacrifice.

Once the Golem had served its purpose, the rabbi locked it in the attic of Prague's "Old-New Synagogue, where it is widely believed that the creature rests to this day. The synagogue survived the widespread destruction directed against Jewish places of worship by the Nazis, and it is said that the Gestapo did not even enter the attic. A statue of Yossele, the Golem of Prague, still stands at the entrance to the city's Jewish sector.

Literary researchers argue that Dr. John Polidori is the obvious source for the medical and scientific concepts that fired Mary's imagination. The weather in Geneva that summer of 1816 was unpleasant, and Lord Byron and his guests found themselves indoors much of the time, telling one another ghost stories and gothic tales.

Mary wrote in her diaries that she and her sister, who had accompanied her when she and Shelley left England, found Polidori both attractive and interesting. He regaled the group with accounts of strange medical phenomena, such as experiments in reviving corpses. Polidori also wrote a horror novel that summer The Vampyre (1819) that many scholars claim contains the seeds of inspiration for both Shelley's Frankenstein and Bram Stoker's Dracula (1897).

In 2002, while researching the influence of science upon the poetry of Percy Shelley, Chris Goulding, a PhD student at Newcastle University, found historical documents which indicated that the true model for Victor Frankenstein was Dr. James Lind (1736-1812), Shelley's scientific mentor at Eton in 1809-1810.

Dr. Lind had become fascinated with the ability of electrical impulses to provoke muscle movement in the legs of dead frogs, and he was quite likely the first scientist in England to conduct galvanic experiments similar to those which enabled Dr. Frankenstein to focus electricity from lightning and bring his monster to life. Percy Shelley was greatly interested in science, and Goulding points out passages in Mary Shelley's unfinished biography of her husband wherein she commented that Percy often spoke of the great intellectual debt that he owed to Dr. Lind.

Whatever or whoever was truly the model for Dr. Victor Frankenstein, one thing is certain: That dreary summer in 1816 as young Mary sat listening to Dr. Polidori spinning his tales of medical mysteries and to Shelley recounting the astonishing experiments of Dr. Lind, her fertile imagination was visualizing the story of a bold scientist who dared to play God and to give life to a grotesque monster--a vision that has haunted readers and movie-goers for nearly 200 years.

THE GREATEST POWER OF ALL OF ALL the forces that move men and women, none is more powerful than that of love and sexual desire. This primal impulse apparently extends into the otherworld and is responsible for some of the most astounding chapters in the literature of psychic phenomena. Here are amazing yet absolutely true stories of - apparitions of lovers seen at their moment of death, - jealous lovers who have sought vengeance from beyond the grave, - sexual molesters from the other world, - warnings and advice from lovers who have passed over, - passionate liaisons between psychic mediums and their contacts, - seducers from UFOs, and even more extraordinary tales. Originally published as HAUNTED LOVERS, this book contains a multitude of actual case histories, many of which were recorded here for first time. The Many Variety of Humanoids

By Paul Dale Roberts, HPI General Manager/Resident Ufologist

I recently went to a block party near my neighborhood and met a blonde that I will call Kathy Razzost (not her real name) and she was telling me how a friend of hers, encountered an alien that appeared to be amphibious. Of course, we easily get into talk of the paranormal, since everyone I associated with knows I am in the paranormal business. It made me think, on how aliens have been described as looking like angels (such as the Nordics) or look like our creepy little Grays. Let's briefly talk about the Grays.

In UFO lore Grays usually have large oval eyes, grayish skin, thin neck, slit for a mouth, large head. There neotenus characteristics give them a close resemblance to a human fetus.

Grays appear to be the dominant alien species here on Earth, but there have been other type of aliens seen on Earth. Let's talk about a few of them. UFO contactee George Adamski would have you believe they look exactly like humans. Then of course we have the angelic Nordics, with their flowing blonde hair, attractive facial features and impressive physiques. There is an actual report in which UFO witnesses saw 2 Grays working side-by-side with two Nordic beings and a Bigfoot. I don't know how much credibility can be said about this sighting, but it would make sense that the Grays would be working with other alien lifeforms. As for Bigfoot, perhaps this is some sort of interdimensional being that is connected with the Grays for whatever grandiose purpose would be anyone's guess.

Some aliens have been described as tall as 10 feet, while others have been described as being only several inches high. In the Voronezh incidents in Russia, aliens have been described as being robotic. In the case of Torakichi's encounters with tengu in 19th Century Japan, aliens were described as goblin like. Alien abductee and author Whitley Streiber describes his encounters with everything from Gray type of aliens, to a praying mantis alien and then his blue goblin worker aliens. Perhaps our ancient stories of elves, fairies, pixies, goblins, trolls all originate with mankind's encounters with alien forces that they could not understand. Mischievous fairies were known to kidnap children or pregnant women which parallels the stories of how aliens are interested in our reproductive and the excretory systems of humans.

Many countries and cultures describe their own type of aliens. Perhaps aliens section certain areas of Earth as their own, making claim to certain territories of Earth. For an example you have the Ikals. These are dark, hairy humanoids that have been related in Mexican folklore from the Tzeltal people. They are described as three feet tall and are associated with a luminous flying object. They are also famed for their abductions of humans and have the capabilities of paralyzing humans.

Some aliens look like frogs, as in the case of the Juminda Incident. The aliens that really creep me out are the insectoids. They are described as having long, spindly limbs, antennas and huge bug-like eyes. Some of these insectoids have been seen working side-by-side with those notorious grays. Some exotic sightings describe aliens known as Fachans. You hear about the Fachan in folklore from the British Isles. Fachans are described as having one large eye, a hand reaching out from its chest and a single leg ending in one foot. The Pucusana Incident describes an encounter with a Fachan. In the West Virginia Flatwoods Incident, the alien was described as being 10 to 15 feet tall, with a red face and luminous eyes. Of course let's not forget the Mothman of West Virginia that has huge wings, glowing eyes, no head. Other winged humanoids have been seen in places like Vietnam and the British Isles.

As you can see aliens come in all shapes and sizes. There are even reports of aliens that look like jelly or a big blob, while others are similar to the alien in the movie the Predator and are able to be partially invisible or completely invisible. If mammals did not exist and dinosaurs continued to roam the Earth, one of those dinosaurs would have evolved to a reptilian being with intelligence.

The best candidate would have been the Troodon aka Stenonychosaurus inequalis, a 1.2 meter tall, 70-kg carnivorous dinosaur with the intelligence of an opossum. What if Troodon had survived the asteroid impact at the end of the Cretaceous period 65 million years ago and continued to evolve? What we would have had on Earth would be intelligent reptilian beings that resemble some of the alien encounters that people now have. If the planet was only populated with insects, perhaps one insect would have evolved with intelligence and that is probably why some aliens resemble insects, because they are insects.

If we were to fully evolve, we may become pure energy beings, that do not require nourishment to survive. We would be creatures of pure energy that have the capabilities of walking through walls. There are so many possibilities as the natural process of nature is to evolve. This is probably why aliens come to us in many appearances.

What is important that sightings of aliens are from credible witnesses. If there is more than one witness to a sighting and the witnesses describe the aliens in the same way, then the sighting could be considered as credible, unless if the witnesses conspired to create a false event. Some sightings may be influenced by the movies, TV shows that we watch, but what is interesting is that no UFO witness ever describes encountering a Klingon.

Hopefully there is a UFologist out there that is documenting every variety of aliens seen, where they have been seen at, the type of clothing they wear, the events that took place when the aliens were seen, the description of their ships, etc. By putting all the pieces of the puzzle together is the only way we will ever complete this paranormal mystery.

Now to other things. In an article I wrote called 'The Scouting Mission to Washington, CA', more information came in. Congratulations to Max Mitchell on being appointed to the position of Chief Field Investigator for Tennessee MUFON. Max has done truly exemplary work as a MUFON Field Investigator for Tennessee for many years. He now will be the main man in charge of assigning cases to other FI's throughout the state. He lives in the far Northeastern part of Tennessee, and I live in the far Southwestern part of the state. We'll be working closely together, however, to get cases assigned to new FI's in all strategic spots lying in between our respective distant locations. Max can be contacted at maximumtenn@aol.com.

Mothman in Middle Tennessee?

Being a paranormal investigator, it is my responsibility to report as accurately as possible and in as much detail as possible, any strange occurrence or sighting that happens my way. Over the last several years of doing this research, I have grown fairly adept at being able to discern small details in photos and videos. I use this same learned ability when doing ghost research, UFO skywatching or any other research activity. It is in this same vein that I will share an occurrence/sighting that I personally witnessed on July 20, 2005. I will not state emphatically that what I witnessed was the actual "Mothman" creature, but what I did witness had the general overall appearance of the creature as described by others.

The time was around 10:30 pm. The night sky had intermittent clouds, but I do not remember the fullness of the moon. I was traveling west on Bethesda-Arno road in the Thompsons Station/Bethesda/Williamson county area of Middle Tennessee, about 25 miles south of the Davidson county line of Nashville. My speed was 40 miles-an-hour though the road is posted for 50. Bethesda-Arno is a typical country road, curvy and straight, fairly narrow and bordered more by farm land than homes. At the exact spot of my sighting there are three homes set back several hundred yards off the road on a fairly steep grade on the north side of the road. The south side of the road is bordered by a fairly steep slope with a thick hedge row of mangled brush and trees, and is offset some 20 feet from the road. There were no other vehicles on the road, and my headlights were on full brightness.

I first noticed the creature as I rounded a curve and continued onto a short straight away with a slight rise in elevation. My estimated distance from the creature was 300 feet and I immediately began to slow my car. The creature was standing a foot or two off the side of the road on the south side.

In back of him was the back side of a 7 ½ foot tall road sign. The sign was attached to a grated metal pole, and the sign itself was triangular and 3 ½ feet in width from point to point, and attached some 3 ½ feet up the pole from the ground. The top of the creature's head was several inches above the sign, though his feet were on the ground. This would have put the creature nearly eight feet tall. The creature's body was covering about 1/5 of the triangular sign.

The head of the creature was human in shape but with a peculiar triangular appearance as well. The head seemed a tad bit to large for the rest of the body. The neck was normal in appearance and attached to narrow shoulders. The chest appearance was normal, though narrower than one would have imagined. The chest area tapered down to a very thin looking waist. The legs of the creature were long and slender, almost skinny, especially the thigh area extending down to the knees. Both arms were long and thin and connected to hands with long, slender fingers, four or five, I am not sure. The face of the creature was shrouded in a shadow like appearance. I could discern no facial features. The creature arms were outstretched, and attached to the wrist of both arms was dark webbing that extended downward and attached at the knees, and also was attached to the torso of the body directly at the underarm and extending downward to the knees. The webbing was solid in structure, with a slight tapering that came to a point mid way to the knees, and then continued to taper as above to the knees. From the shoulders down to the feet, with the exception of the arms and webbing, the color of the creature was bright, reflective red. The color reminded me of paintings that depict the Devil with the ever present pitchfork, though I had absolutely no gut feeling that this creature was either the Devil or any other type of religious portrayed demon. My gut feeling told me that this was some type of unknown species that modern day science insists does not exist. The duration of my sighting was a brightly lit 7 to 8 seconds and at one point not more than 7 feet from the open window of my car and as I passed the creature. Never once did the creature move or make any type of hostile gesture toward me.

I managed to bring my car to a full stop some 100 yards from the creature. I immediately turned my car around in the middle of the road in the hopes of seeing the creature again, but it was for naught. Being a researcher intent on being accurate, I decided to retrace my path several times in the attempt to dismiss any status quo explanation for what I had witnessed. I have traveled down this road numerous times day and night, and have never once mistaken a tree limb, brush, road signs, or the rarity of nighttime walkers for a creature such as I witnessed. The rather tall and thick hedge growth on the south side of the road, and the distance from the road to the nearest house on the north side, precludes an attempt by someone playing a practical joke.

The distance to run and hide in a matter of just a few seconds would have been impossible. The road sign is a typical road sign, and there was no mistaking that a very tall creature with a slender body and wings was obscuring part of the sign. There was no bright color hindrance reflecting from the headlights of my car to skew my vision since the creature was standing on the back side of the sign, the dark side. My conclusion then was simple to deduce, I had seen this creature in all of the details I have just shared.

I do not know what type of creature I witnessed on July 20, 2005. Was it the same "Mothman" creature of West Virginia fame? I do not know. Have any disasters happened near Nashville as was the basis for the story and movie "The Mothman Prophecy?" Not to my knowledge. As with many other things paranormal I've investigated that cannot be quickly explained, it is a wait and see attitude that takes much patience before the final answer reveals itself.

Mothman in Middle Tennessee: Second Sighting and Flying?

Back on July 20, 2005 I had a nighttime sighting encounter with a creature similar in appearance to what has been typically described as "Mothman." My detailed report concerning this sighting encounter can be read on my website www.alineresearchgroup.com, in the "Anomalous Report" sub-section page under the "Investigative Research Evidence" home page link. How fortunate I felt afterwards that I happened to be in the right place at the right time to personally witness such an elusive creature. It is not often that life with its ironic twists and turns affords an individual such a rare "once in a lifetime opportunity," and even more rare for yet another sighting encounter, but that is exactly what transpired for me on May 16, 2008. My previous encounter occurred in the dark of night on a lonely country road where this creature was only illuminated by the headlights of my car, but this new sighting occurred in mid afternoon next to and partially over a major interstate highway.

The time was approximately 2:30pm on a Friday afternoon, and I was travelling south on Interstate 65 just south of Nashville. At this time of day it is not unusual for there to be sporadic areas of congestion due to the usual mix of commuters heading home after work to the southern outlying counties, and for families on vacation heading to the warm, sun soaked beaches of Florida, Alabama and Mississippi. I did not have a long distance to travel on I-65 before exiting onto the less congested I-840 outer loop, but my patience at what I perceived to be slower traffic in the fast lane causing these congested areas was not at a premium this day. Due to some quick in and out lane changing on my part, I was able to break free just past the Peytonsville Road exit.

Right past Peytonsville Road, I crested a small rise and any hint of being near a major city disappeared. Farm land and rolling hills began to dot both sides of the interstate. From this position I had an unrestricted view to the over pass for I-840 some two miles further down the road. At approximately one mile from 840, the interstate widens to three and four lanes. Just before the this widening beings, about 7/10ths of mile from my location, I noticed what I first believed to be a small, black color crop dusting plane or a large Estes type, model rocket emerging from a narrow valley to the right (heading west to east), and only 150 to 200 feet off the ground. Though crop dusting planes are not uncommon in this area, I dismissed these possibilities for lack of a landing gear or tail fins. I next wondered if it was a large vulture. Living in the country as I do and seeing vultures all the time, I dismissed this thought as well, for it was way too large for any vultures in this area.

By this time my natural, insatiable curiosity to unravel a mystery was in full swing. Looking at it from the side, it was nearly impossible to determine what this "flying whatever" was. I was hoping that I would be able to observe it better and see more detail as it continued flying eastward. This would at least afford me the opportunity to view it from another angle, but instead and without warning, it executed an almost perfect hairpin turn directly over the far right lane and several slower traveling vehicles. At the same time its body tilted to the right and downward affording me a clear view as if I was above it. It was at this point that I recognized the unmistakable characteristic shape of another "Mothman" type creature.

The color of the creature's body was black, and from the neck down appeared as kite shaped; its head a rounded diamond shape and oversized. Its arms were extended outward; its hands at an 8 and 4 o'clock position away from its body on a horizontal line with its waist. A dark, solid web like material, similar to a bat's web, extended from both wrists along the arms to the armpits, then continued downward along both sides of the body past the waist to half-way between the knees and the feet. When it first emerged from the narrow valley its speed seemed rather slow and lackadaisical. It seemed oblivious or unaware of the traffic congestion along its flight path, but then when it reached the interstate itself and began the hairpin turn, its speed increased dramatically but without flapping its wings. A few seconds later the creature vanished from view. I do not feel it flew back into the valley itself, but instead, into the thick stand of trees on the neighboring hill and used it's coloration as a camouflage to prevent further observation.

When I decided to make my documentary 'UFOs:

A Need To Know' in 1990 I immersed myself in research reading everything possible on the subject, particularly 'The Report On Unidentified Flying Objects' by Capt Ed Ruppelt USAF who headed up the Air Force's 'Project Blue Book' at the time of its inception.

I never could believe the Abduction accounts, I still don't know what to think. But two weeks before I headed across the country to film the documentary I made with Video City's Bob Brown, I had a paranormal experience.

I was sitting in my parents house, above Claremont Canyon 1,200 feet above San Francisco Bay. It was about 5 P.M.

I saw some baby squirrels on our back deck, and I had never seen babies before, only adults. I was getting up to tell my mom and have her come look when I saw what appeared to be aircraft lights approaching the house. I was concerned because it appeared to be flying very low, directly at our house. A bright column of light then shone into the house, coming through the ceiling. I said to myself, 'I gotta see what's doing this' and stood up.

The column of light traveled across the room and stooped outside on the other side of the house from the canyon. It lit up the ground and looked like it was composed of hundreds of individual light beams. I went outside to the porch, I became surrounded by the light column

, I was in the middle of it, I couldn't move. I wasn't uncomfortable, but I couldn't move. As I felt myself lifting up, looking down at our house; I said to myself 'I'm finally going to see what these things look like'. The next thing I knew I was wide awake in bed, staring straight ahead. It was 7 O'Clock in the morning.

It was 14 hours of time I can't account for. I don't consider myself an abductee or anything like that, but it gave a new respect for people who described 'Missing Time' events, related to a UFO sighting.

Black Triangular Greenville, Tennessee

Black Triangular Object Seen Flying at Tree Top Level

Drawing of Object by Witness Showing the Object in a Turn

Drawing of Object by Witness Showing the Object From the Back.

Date of Sighting: May 6, 2008

Time of Sighting: 9:06 PM EDT
Duration of Sighting: 3 to 5 Minutes
Location of Sighting: Greenville, Tennessee

Weather: It was a cool night, no wind with little cloud cover. I was able to see the stars. I usually look up at the stars and that is what brought my attention to the object. (Weather as Reported by Witness.)

Description: I don't know if I'm crazy or my eyes were playing tricks on me, but when I got home I saw something that was out of the ordinary in the sky. It was low flying, no flashing lights about tree top level plus 100 feet. I am unsure of the size. I believe that it was bigger than a private plane. the motion was slow moving and I could hear no noise. The direction of movement was from East to West and then it turned toward the southwest. The color was black and I did not see any reflection from light. I was only able to make out a triangle silhouette. There was light from underneath kind of clustered, almost like an incandescent light bulb, but it DID NOT change any colors. The light stayed kind of a yellowish color.

The back of the object had two real large rectangle shaped ovals with NO type of flame or fire coming from them. I am not quite sure what to make of this. We do have a small airport here in town, but I don't think that the airport is used much a night. We also have two helicopters located at both hospitals (Jet Rangers), but everything was quiet. A plane (commercial I think) was passing high overhead. I say the plane was probably about commercial height and I could see the flashing lights on it as well as the red light. This thing that I saw DID NOT have any flashing lights at all. I had stayed and watched it until it had disappeared out of sight and then went inside to try to make sense of what I had just seen. I did call the county sheriff's office to ask if anyone else had made any calls and they said: "no, I was the only one to call."

The Mothman Saga by Brent Raynes

As most seasoned ufologists know, back in 1967, a New York journalist named John A. Keel conducted several extensive field trips to UFO and monster plagued Point Pleasant, West Virginia. There he interviewed over a hundred witnesses to what had become known as "Mothman," something very eerie and frightening that stood about 7-foot tall, had a ten foot wingspan, by some accounts had two glowing red hypnotic eyes, and reportedly was able to pursue an automobile up to 100 miles per hour in a single bound. To a roving reporter like Keel, a man who had spent weeks tracking the legendary yeti in Tibet (fully recounted in his book Jadoo, published in 1957), monster hunting was old sport. But a beast with wings was a new challenge and novelty that he just couldn't pass up.

Several years after this wave of high strangeness, Ron Schaffner, editor of Creature Chronicles, and yours truly descended on Point Pleasant one weekend in May of 1976. First we visited the Clifton F. McClintic Wildlife Station, an explosives manufacturing plant during World War II, seven miles north of Point Pleasant, where so many of the extraordinary UFO and Mothman sightings had been reported. We then interviewed several of the eyewitnesses Keel has written about in his many articles and mentioned in his book, The Mothman Prophecies. We discovered how one of those witnesses, since her first terrifying Mothman sighting in November 1966, which she had experienced in the company of teenaged friends, afterward was, two years afterwards, haunted by the Mothman phenomenon. In fact, she told us that she believed that over the years since 1966 she had had literally "hundreds" of recurrent encounters with the creature.

The woman told us that she had been within a mere yard of it, described its luminous and protruding red eyes, and recalled one occasion when it was peering in at her through an apartment window. "The bedroom window was right off the roof," she explained. "It was sitting on the roof. By then I was so used to seeing it I just pulled the blinds and went on. I felt kind of sorry for it gave you the feeling like it was sitting there wishing it could come in and get warm, because it was cold out that night."

"It seems like it doesn't want to hurt you," she added. "But you're too afraid when you see it to do anything."

But despite her fear she has a kind of fatal attraction for Mothman. She explained that anytime anyone mentioning going out to the McClintic Wildlife Station to look for the creature that she will usually go along. "I keep wanting to go back to find out what it is but I don't want to see it again," she confessed. The year before our visit, she told us how she had in fact returned with a group to look around and she said that she again saw Mothman, standing in the doorway of the now infamous abandoned power plant. That had been her most recent encounter.

"We had never heard of a UFO or anything like that before in our lives," this woman's mother told us. "Now that's the truth. We had never heard of it before until that happened to the kids and then after that happened everything went berserk." This mother even came to have her own Mothman sighting in early 1967, and later saw UFOs.

During our Point Pleasant visit I also got to speak with Mrs. Virginia Thomas. She described for me her legendary Mothman experience of November 2, 1967. Her husband Ralph had worked as a care taker at the wildlife station, where they lived, and that day Mrs. Thomas had stepped outside to cover over some motorcycles as dark clouds were forming overhead. It was then that she heard a sound "like a broken fan belt on a car" and then in a field across the road saw a grayish form "shaped like a man" but "running like lightning." In fact, 'he' was running so fast that she told me that she later concluded that it must have been some sort of man-made robot.

Keel's published accounts of Mrs. Thomas' sighting failed to recount several peculiar details that she related to me about the event. "It took over my thinking, like it could pick it up and take it away from me," she explained. She also described how during the experience her ears were making cracking and popping sounds, and that her eyes were fixed on it, and she was unable to look away, and though she could open her mouth she was unable to utter a sound.

Mrs. Thomas, a devout Pentecostal, told me that she periodically has prophetic dreams. The one I had been familiar with from Mothman Prophecies was, of course, the one that seemed to foreshadow the tragic collapse of the Silver Bridge on December 15, 1967, exactly thirteen months from the day when the Mothman epidemic in Point Pleasant had first erupted. She described how she had once foreseen an explosion at a jail in Point Pleasant also where several people had been killed. She added that after such a dream she feels bad but then when the actual event occurs she "doesn't shed a tear." It was as though, she added, the dream had prepared her. She said that when Keel had visited Point Pleasant shortly after the bridge collapse that he met with her and remarked how it hadn't seemed to disturb her too badly.

John Keel and I have corresponded off and on all the way back to 1969. In 1993, he wrote me: "As you discovered, my book only covered a small part of the overall situation. It would have taken six books to discuss all of it. What happened there also happened (and is still happening) in many other parts of the country. I was flabbergasted by the scope and complexity of the phenomena in the 1960s. I found the same identical situations everywhere... from Long Island to Hartshorn, Oklahoma. I spent some time in Fyffe, Alabama then and, as you know, they are still having UFO stuff along with many animal mutilations, poltergeist activity, etc. Unfortunately, there was little interest on Madison Ave. in the 60s and there was no place to publish any of my findings. In addition, the hardcore UFO buffs, NICAP, APRO, et al, fought bitterly against things like mutes, abductions, lost time cases, etc. They chose instead to attack me and accuse me of making it all up. ...I continue to receive a great deal of mail about Mothman and things that have happened in West Virginia since. Thousands of people have had extraordinary experiences all over the country which match the experiences of the people in Point Pleasant. ...Incidentally, there have been Mothman-type sightings in every part of the world. I no longer find them intriguing."

Keel determined that "Mothman" had a number of historical parallels. In India, for example, there were the legends of the giant airborne Garuda, and here in North America there was the terrifying Piasa that Indians of the Dakotas described as having red eyes and a long tail. There have also been the tales of a winged red eyed monster called the Jersey Devil that has haunted parts of Pennsylvania and New Jersey as far back as 1735.

The “Birdman” of Madisonville, Tennessee? Tennessee’s Mothman?

“That was what we called him,” Mark Boring, editor of the Monroe County Buzz of Madisonville, Tennessee, replied in regards to the mention of the “birdman” stories I had heard about from his area. He said that he had been “fairly skeptical” of it back then. He remembered how at the time a local radio station had mentioned it, made fun of it, and thinks the local paper might have run one story on it.

“The Appalachian mountains to our east run northeast and southwest and you get into a valley here as you come out of the Smoky Mountains. In the valley here are north and south ridges. Coming out of the mountains they will run maybe 5 or 10 miles apart, and you’ll travel east and west and you’ll have another ridge line. One of the ridge lines is known as the Hiwassee Knob. That’s an old Indian word. It has an old fire tower on it that was built years and years ago. A lot of kids, back in the late 1960s and 70s, used to gather out near this old fire tower and build bonfires. It was a place just to go and hang out.

He remarked that it must have had a real wide wingspan, and Mark responded, “Yeah, I would say 6 or 7 feet.” At the conclusion of our interview I mentioned about the Mothman of West Virginia and how that was back in 1966 and on, and he paused and stated, “Oh, it was wasn’t it. That’s right. (laughed). I don’t know. It’s a strange world. I guess the older I get the more accepting I am of things and the more open I am for certain things to be real or not.”

The Lights
I asked Mark about the mysterious “lights” I had heard about that were seen around the Knobs, similar to the Brown Mountain “lights” of North Carolina. “I never did see any of the lights. I know that I heard about them. There’s another line of Knobs maybe 8 or 10 miles away to the east called the Notchey Creek Knobs that have more life and activity than the Hiwassee Knobs.”

in the March 1976 edition of FATE magazine, a Virginia Miller of Elma, New York, wrote a letter saying that after reading a book review of Mothman Prophecies she was reminded of an experience with a similar creature that her father had had, of all times, on Halloween night in 1974! She wrote that they had not even heard of Mothman until nearly a year after her father’s own encounter. Her father, outside the house that night watching for overzealous trick or treaters felt a compulsion to go to the backyard where Virginia had recently had a miniature replica of Stonehenge constructed out of cement blocks. Stumbling over a low garden fence he fell to his knees, got up and approached the circle. Then over nearby trees Mr. Miller was startled to see a human-like figure with a 9-10 foot wingspan and a “large grotesque head” come gliding down towards him. It was very close and then suddenly it veered off back towards the woods. Virginia felt that her father had been protected from the “gargoyle” looking thing because a friend trained in the ancient Celtic traditions had blessed the site with an old Celtic blessing. She also reported that like the people chronicled by Keel, she and her parents were “plagued by various misfortunes for months” after the incident.

A correspondent of mine wrote Virginia Miller and later visited her and her father. The creature, my friend was told, had had “leathery skin,” “glowing eyes,” and a “turtle like face” with a “long neck,” and like so many of the others Keel had described the Miller’s had a history of various kind of psychic experiences.

The Halloween encounter described by Virginia Miller made me reflect a little on the Mothman incidents. It seems like the Mothman’s appearances in West Virginia kind of erupted around Halloween of 1966 and 1967. I also came to correspond with a Swedish UFO researcher named Hakan Blomqvist who was very interested in Mothman. He recalled how one Swedish couple during a UFO wave in his country had seen “several small humanoids floating around their car.” He added, “The creatures had big, hypnotic red eyes, just like Mothman.” That wave of sightings occurred on Halloween eve, 1965. Coincidence again

This is the original DVD set that became a popular seller at the annual Mothman Festival in Pt. Pleasant, WV. It contains 18 hrs. of interviews with Mothman celebs like John Keel, Marcella Bennett, Faye DeWitt, Tom Ury, and Sharon Moore, as well as discussions with various experts who help Colvin demonstrate that the Mothman is really an ancient deity known worldwide for fighting crime--and even saving humanity--in times of stress, using human agents knighted with psychic powers.

REVIEW EXCERPT - "THE MOTHMAN'S PHOTOGRAPHER"
"A documentary news series describing Colvin's first-hand experiences with the famous Mothman craze of WV, circa 1967. Colvin is...a crazy, neo-hillbilly genius who has had a quiet, but steady, impact on at least three generations of disaffected American film nerds

His spare, understated documentaries on the WTO protests and the McVeigh execution (which we were proud to sponsor) spoke to Gens 'Y' and 'Z.' [But] his most important legacy, his 20-year study of "slackers" in Austin, Texas, literally helped touch off the whole Gen-X craze. Colvin's obsessive videotaping in mid-80s Austin became the stylistic model for the cult hit "Slacker" (shot by his friends Richard Linklater and Lee Daniel)...Colvin helped an entire generation become conscious of its place in history... In the Mothman's Photographer, Colvin is again helping raise consciousness, this time by looking into the paranormal aspects of his own reality, as well as the realities of other sub-Boomers...Definitely two thumbs up!" -Ben Camp, Taos Public Radio

"Truly mindblowing stuff. I started watching...and can't stop. Very engrossing." -Adam Gorightly, conspiracy author

Note: even though this series breaks every rule by being extremely long, with no fancy editing or effects, it has consistently been shown to keep people glued to their seats for days at a time. If you don't believe us, buy one and see for yourself. It's magic!

Commentary: Another week closer to the Big Election. The news this week was dominated by two stories - almost to the exclusion of everything else. The Election and the Economy... Congress declared war on the economy and by mid-week had carpet-bombed most of the banks into submission. The economic collapse comes at an opportune time, both globally and domestically. It's the cosmic trigger for the next step in our eventual total subjugation. The reset button has been pushed on another callously created inflationary investment bubble. On a metaphysical level, what is happening? What is this all about? Any time the Fear theme is played there are [perhaps] unintended consequences on the human and metaphysical level. The industrial-level fear needed to achieve the material goals of the rich - themselves motivated by the Greed meme - causes people to be more jittery and prone to greater impulsive action. Since the world is a complex place, secondary stressors spawned by the uncertainty in the environment impact people in unforeseen ways. So, during these tumults you'll see an increase in suicide, spousal/familial homicide and abuse, and people who've been just barely hanging on at a nominal functioning level will drop off the edge - into the safety net. Oh, wait - there is no safety net. That didn't happen - we didn't take care of that, did we? We're supposed to care for the hopeless ourselves. Anyone who has ever tried to get help for someone with mental illness can attest that the system is geared more toward the perpetuation of itself, than toward getting services for those in need. Since the Carter Administration dumped the mentally ill onto the streets, and the Reagan Administration signed on with a true bipartisan spirit - creating "the homeless" we've had to try to take care of this thrown away population without the help of the government that created them - and continues to create them.

Many who read this won't remember that before the late 1970s we really didn't have a large un-served, semi-nomadic population adrift in the urban and suburban landscape. But since then we have. The unspoken truth is that most of the chronically homeless are mentally ill. The decision was made to "free" them to save money - emptying institutions of those who could not pay for services. The community at large is expected to take care of them - except they cannot be helped. There is no one to provide the framework that they need in order to function. So, they roam the streets - victims and victimizers - until they die or are incarcerated for some crime. I worked with a homeless shelter for much of the 1980s-90s, and I saw the hopelessness first hand. The night the first Gulf War kicked off, under Bush I, I was working there and everyone was focused on the TV. As we watched the bombs fall, the staff had to de-stress several Vietnam-Era vets who were convinced that they were either in combat, or were being mobilized. It is very spooky dealing with folks who are totally invested in a delusion. [like UFO cultists, lol] The point is that those guys were still under the effect of their residual programming. When the fear ramped up they tried to answer the call. No one ever switched them back to normal consciousness after they were used. There is a metaphysical corollary - I'll discuss that below in the "Paranormal Topic of the Week."

Anyway, as a further aside: The mechanism for motivating folk varies with their age and social strata. Make no mistake, all are controlled - even the would-be controllers. The rich and the poor in America are controlled primarily through the Greed meme. The middle class is controlled primarily through Fear. They not only have something to lose, but something to gain. The rich feel invulnerable to the day-to-day fears. The poor are only motivated by manufactured fear at its most intense level, and even then they can accommodate a very high level of risk without changing their behavior. That's what keeps the impoverished in the inner city, despite significant risk. Even after losing a child to neighborhood violence they will stay - even though they have nothing, they have the illusion that things are better where they are - They waste their substance chasing the consumer goods whose ads permeate their living space. And BTW, the violence is almost always a by-product of the Greed meme.

People react to what they are given. At the appointed time the sleepers awaken from their slumbers. Some believe that the controllers have created a cadre of mind-controlled surrogates who are used to do the bidding of their masters - whether as a courier, assassin, prostitute, or another role. On the face of it - it seems a ludicrous proposition. Yet we have disquieting bits of information - ala Sirhan Sirhan, Manson, MacVeigh and others... The timing of less well-known perpetrators, like the school shooters interestingly coincide with other events - often enough to give me pause to consider the issue. We speak here hypothetically - of course - because to do otherwise would be a step down a road we dare not travel, you & I.

Paranormal Topic of the Week

How are we "Used?" We discussed briefly above, what it means to be used by the material powers that be. There is a paranormal counterpart to that. Sometimes people are used to accomplish a metaphysical task in the material world. There are some things a spirit / ultra-terrestrial just cannot do. Things like: Move energy through material space, or commit a physical act [perhaps to generate psychic energy], or breach the gap between realms. Whatever the game is [it spans generations and can be minutely incremental], it sometimes involves moves between the realms. Evidently, for some things it is necessary to use human "mules" to transport metaphysical energy in packets from one area to another - in an ongoing spiritual battle. It may take a certain amount of energy to - for example - manifest Mothman or some other BHM. So, an entity wishing to do so might inspire some person who had opened themselves to the ultrasphere to perform some ritual [to access some previously cached energy] or perform a sacrifice [to generate energy]- and when that act is accomplished the manifestation can occur. Of course the mechanism can seem very complex - I'll lay that out in greater detail some other time.

The material world is where it's all happening. Did you ever ask yourself why the focus of all of the spiritual / alien / ultraterrestrial activity is planet Earth? From the information provided by non-human entities, we are led to believe that a nearly infinite number of races and classes of entities are operating in our sphere. What is the reason for all of this interest, especially if there are so many "others" out there? They would have us believe that we are not unique - but that is clearly not the case. They come here because we are unique. So, what is unique about us / here? The physical realm is the only place where matter manifests. It is where we are. It is the only place where a spiritual entity (us) can cohabit both realms and experience the blended joy that is inherent in being corporeal. We taste, smell, touch - and are touched, feel the blood in our veins... We love, hate, feel pain, draw breath, feel the wind against our skin. Nowhere else in creation does that happen. In short, they wish to possess our bodies to feel "alive" because, dear friends - they are not alive in the sense that you and I are alive. There are certain problems with possession however, so that is not their ultimate goal. This is such a complex issue - I was just about to type the words "I'll talk about that more later..." I don't have time to go into this component right now, but the issue circles back on itself. There is so much you need to know to understand this issue. Every topic is a prerequisite for all of the others - there is no clean place to start - no firm common ground. Ah, well - let this shallow treatment suffice for now. Maybe we can get together over a beer sometime and flesh out these dry bones.

Non-material entities wishing to execute some task in the material world must generally use a material creature to accomplish this goal. Even temporary manifestation must be done through either witting or unwitting confederacy with a corporeal entity. There is a natural protection against intrusion or control by alien entities. As long as we maintain our normal state of consciousness our persons are sacrosanct - within reason. Our state of consciousness is of course, directly related to our health, spiritual, and mental wellness.

How can we become vulnerable to spiritual forces / entities?

How can we become vulnerable to spiritual forces / entities?

Any time you surrender your will to another, or have your will stripped away - you are vulnerable. That does not mean that you will be "used" every time you are vulnerable, but it increases your risk. Many people would blanch at my warnings and cautions. The things I've cautioned against are what pass most times, for psychic research. So, I'm talking to a group of people who are almost certain to disagree with me. Nevertheless I say it. I don't ask you to believe it because I say it. I ask you to weigh what I've said against your experience from here on. Most folk really should not dabble in spiritual research - you do a disservice to those people when you let them into your groups. All of this type of activity is an "at-your-own-risk" type of pastime. So, when you initiate the unready into your activities, you bear a responsibility for their fate... Remember the mantra of the healer: "First, do no harm."

We face a conundrum in metaphysical / psychic / paranormal / UFOlogical research. Many of us who try to understand the unknown lack the basic understanding of our humanness to make sense of what we observe as researchers. Why is it that I seldom see metaphysical researcher's groups - for instance volunteering at homeless shelters? We are in a unique position - claiming enlightenment or special knowledge, yet lacking any evidence of that enlightenment other than our claims. Be human first. Fully human, and humane. Does that shoe fit? If not, disregard the comment. If it fits, put it on and walk in it

A further point: It is not necessary for the person who is initiating spiritual contact to understand what they are doing. They may even disbelieve actively. The Omniverse does not ask our permission to operate. It is. We are subject to its rules and vagaries - whether we understand them or not. Gravity worked for millennia before we named it - and we still do not understand it. Our understanding always lags behind our experience.

Well, that wraps up another steaming hot serving of paranormal food for thought...

Courage,

MCB

Hyperdimensional Resonator

Most of you know that I have written extensively about Steven Gibbs and his hyperdimensional resonator. This is a device that many—including me—believe one can travel through time with. Certainly astrally, and even physically although that is quite dangerous. And it is a bit more unbelievable as well. There are several excellent cases on record that make good verification points about this: Carlos Novella of Miami, Florida, for example, found himself in Canada after minutes before having walked out into his backyard! On another occasion, he was in South America and yet a third time he was on a UFO with an alien chiding him“

Don't you know it is dangerous to travel with a primitive device like that one?“ Of course you could dismiss these claims as the ravings of a lunatic had not there been indirect verification. His mother had to send him ticket money and a coat to get home from Canada and also the same (minus the coat) for South America! On another occasion, after running the device in his car, Carlos drove his mother (a pharmacist) and his sister (a physician) the distance of three miles to attend an event. All three were mystified to see Christmas decorations in October! Upon returning along the same street, the direction were then all for Halloween! Please don't tell me that everyone for 3 miles suddenly went out into their yards and removed the Christmas decorations!

For another example a Norwegian user of the HDR went into his back shed and disappeared into the 1500s. From there he went to the late 19th century and when he returned saw a photo of one of the people he had visited in the 19th century! He had (the man in the photo) also been described by the man in the 14th century! I know that is confusing, but this is a well-educated man who has studied time-travel extensively!

I could give many other examples, but most are not as good as the one of Rick Lipani, an Italian baker and musician from West Cleveland, Ohio. Rick suffered the premature loss of his beloved wife Cathy and since he had learned to go out-of-body years before, he purchased an HDR unit to enhance his ability to do this! But Rick outdid himself! He not only time-traveled, but he also went to “the other side” where he saw many people whom he knew had passed years before! He was given information about the future (you are seeing the beginning of it now with stock market crashes, etc.) and that things will change for the better by 2012. Rick met Frank Sinatra and heard him sing New York, New York for a friend who had recently passed and Rick also ran into Al Capone in 1932! But probably his greatest experience was running into Robert Monroe who showed Rick a lot of things about the afterlife. Rather than verbally describe all this new information, I am sending you all some of the graphic art by Rick from his travels and experiences which contain explanations along with them. Enjoy!

This is called a “Palace Concept” because it was built according to what someone imagined and wanted for their afterlife home!

This is one of the main corridors in the main rest home. People come here to recuperate from being victimized by long-term illnesses. Or they may have a belief from earth and need to have that attachment broken. For example, they may have been burned severely in a fire and believe that they are this way throughout eternity when this is not so. Or they need to be rescued from strong material ties such as rich people who feel they are still ‘entitled’ to rule over others. The door at the very end leads to an arena where they do magnetic healings. People there are told

“we will heal you and make you whole.”

Zena, Rick, and Herc.

DMT: The Spirit Molecule

In 1990, I began the first new human research with psychedelic, or hallucinogenic, drugs in the United States in over 20 years. These studies investigated the effects of N,N-dimethyltryptamine, or DMT, an extremely short-acting and powerful psychedelic. During the project's five years, I administered approximately 400 doses of DMT to 60 human volunteers. This research took place at the University of New Mexico's School of Medicine in Albuquerque, where I was tenured Associate Professor of Psychiatry.

I was drawn to DMT because of its presence in all of our bodies. Perhaps excessive DMT production, coming from the mysterious pineal gland, was involved in naturally occurring "psychedelic" states. These might include birth, death and near-death, psychosis, and mystical experiences. Only later, while the study was well under way, did I also begin considering DMT's role in the "alien abduction" experience.

The DMT project was founded on cutting edge brain science, especially the psychopharmacology of serotonin. However, my own background powerfully affected how we prepared people for, and supervised, their drug sessions. One of these was a decades-long relationship with a Zen Buddhist training monastery.

The Spirit Molecule reviews what we know about psychedelic drugs in general, and DMT in particular. It then traces the DMT research project from its earliest intimations through the maze of committees and review boards to its actual performance. Our research subjects were healthy volunteers. The studies were not intended to be therapeutic, although all of us believed in the potentially beneficial properties of psychedelic drugs. The project generated a wealth of biological and psychological data, much of which I have already published in the scientific literature.

On the other hand, I have written nearly nothing about volunteers' stories. I hope these many excerpts from over 1000 pages of my bedside notes provide a sense of the remarkable emotional, psychological, and spiritual effects of this chemical. Problems inside and outside of the research environment led to the end of these studies in 1995.

Despite the difficulties we encountered, I am optimistic about the possible benefits of the controlled use of these drugs. Based upon what we learned in the New Mexico research, I offer a wide-ranging vision for DMT's role in our lives, and conclude by proposing a research agenda and optimal setting for future work with DMT and related drugs.

The late Willis Harman possessed one of the most discerning minds to apply himself to the field of psychedelic research. Willis, earlier in his career, had published the first and only scientific study using psychedelics to enhance the creative process. When I met him 30 years later in 1994, he was president of Institute of Noetic Sciences, an organization founded by the sixth man to walk on the moon, Edgar Mitchell. Mitchell's mystical experience, stimulated by viewing the Earth on his return home, inspired him to study phenomenon outside the range of traditional science, which nevertheless might yield to a broader application of the scientific method.

During a long walk together along the central California coastal range one day, he said firmly, "At the very least, we must enlarge the discussion about psychedelics." It is in response to his request that I include highly speculative ideas and my own personal motivations for performing this research. This approach will satisfy no-one in every respect. There is intense friction between what we know intellectually or even intuitively, and what we experience with the aid of DMT. As one of our volunteers exclaimed after his first high dose session, "Wow! I never expected that!" Or, as Dogen, a thirteenth century Japanese Buddhist teacher said, "We must always be disturbed by the truth." Enthusiasts of the psychedelic drug culture may dislike the conclusion that DMT has no beneficial effects in and of itself; rather, the context in which people take them is at least as important. Proponents of drug control may condemn what they read as encouragement to take psychedelic drugs and a glorification of the DMT experience.

Practitioners and spokespersons of traditional religions may reject the suggestion that spiritual states can be accessed, and mystical information gained, through drugs. Those who have undergone "alien abduction," and their advocates, may interpret as a challenge to the "reality" of their experiences my suggestion that DMT is intimately involved in these events. Opponents and supporters of abortion rights may find fault with my proposal that pineal DMT release at 49 days after conception marks the entrance of the spirit into the fetus. Brain researchers may object to the suggestion that DMT affects the brain's ability to receive information, rather than generating those perceptions themselves.

They also may dismiss the proposal that DMT can allow our brains to perceive dark matter or parallel universes, realms of existence inhabited by conscious entities.

However, if I did not describe all the ideas behind the DMT studies, and the entire range of our volunteers' experiences, I would not be telling the entire tale. At best, The Spirit Molecule would have little effect on the scope of discussion about psychedelics; at worst, the book would reduce the field. Nor would I be honest if I did not share my own speculations and theories based upon decades of study, and listening to hundreds of DMT sessions. This is why I did it. This is what happened. This is what I think about it.

It is so important for us to understand consciousness. It is just as important to place psychedelic drugs in general, and DMT in particular, into a personal and cultural matrix where we do the most good, and the least harm. In such a wide open area of inquiry, it is best that we reject no ideas until we actually disprove them. It is in the interest of enlarging the discussion about psychedelic drugs that I've written The Spirit Molecule.
